What is Decorative Painting?

In this age of do-it-yourself books and videos and cable channels dedicated to beautifying our living spaces, it is not surprising that many of us are aware of terms such as "faux finishing" and "decorative paint techniques." But what do they really mean?

Faux finishes are those designed to make an everyday surface, such as drywall, plasterboard, or unfinished wood, look like something extraordinary.

They can transform a chair rail into polished black marble, or a plain door into magnificent burl wood.

Special paint techniques include sponging and ragging on and off, "washing," stippling, etc.

Some finishes are as simple as applying one complementary color on top of another.

More complex finishes entail the use of many colors applied in different stages.

Using metallic finishes provides a particularly impressive touch in special paint techniques.
